

is the story of Eusebius, but it is evident that the Eastern legions had been carefully mobilised, and whether such a peace was granted or not, the death of Constantine in 337 was the signal for a renewal of the old conflict between the two great empires of the world, and for a war which lasted without intermission through the reigns of Constantine's son and that of his nephew Julian.

